viii STA'stas and its branches.

(E21) STA'stas vs Sā'ñgal lā'nas. Stastas is the name given to salmon-eggs after the young have begun to form. ... sāñg is the name of a kind of sea-bird, flocks of which rush down together upon anything they find to eat, and make a great noise. (like their people at a potlatch) Chief. - Eda'nsa (from Th. it?nacu' ["rotting left of it"], applied to a glacier when it comes down into the sea and melts away.

(E21a) K!ā'was sea-eggs.

Stastas seem to be of foreign origin, part Tl, part Ts
Re Stastas: "Mr Henry Edensaw says that his father who was chief of the Stastas, assigned two regions to his family. A small part of them, including the chief, came down from the Stikine, whence was derived the name Eda'nsa ("glacier"), but the majority came from the Nass."

"Two chiefs were known chiefs of K'awata --- but the family lands were mainly about Lose Spit, which they must have acquired after they had been evacuated by their previous Kava owners and in Naden Harbour. Some of the Saetas proper (E 21) went to Alaska in the great migration, and they were also represented <sup>there</sup> by a large branch called Yadis (E 21 g).
