The unasked question at beginning is the answer to Where did Haven come from?

The unasked question at end

What became of that spare bite?

It is the eye that watches itself. The fifth eye
It is the unasked question, it is what is taken for granted the unstated underlying premise

The half-stone lady with the 5th kind of sight } You have to = The 2 stones inside the 5th box } make them up yourself

When you figure out for yourself that the answer to the unanswered question at the beginning is the unasked question at the end, then you have found yourself
You are the whole thing.

What Haven could not see in the box was himself He thought it was 2 other things. It was himself, and he bit off 2 pieces of himself - one was the reef, one was himself, one was the sky

What Haven couldn't see was that it was himself in the box. We can see that, but he couldn't. It was just one thing. He thought it was two (maybe substance and life - any of those things you figured out). It was really himself. And he bit off parts of himself. Hem, biting a piece of stone, was the vag. dent. biting off his own hard penis.

The story gives you the questions. You ask it. It is its own answer. You are the story.
